Peter and the whale

by Howard Larkin

"Take it easy, boy!" Peter laughed as his favorite malamute jumped all around him and tried to lick his face. "You'll get fed. You worked hard during the winter leading the sled dogs. Now you can enjoy yourself."

"Peter, come here," Papa called from the back door of the Alaskan home.

Papa sounds worried, Peter thought as he hurried up the stony path from the kennel to the house. "What's the matter? Is Mamma worse?"

"Yes, Son. I just called on the shortwave radio to the bush pilot. He'll contact Dr. Phill. Then he may have to come and pick us up." The shortwave crackled, and Papa went back to answer.

He came back in about five minutes. "Peter, it looks as if Mamma will have to go stay with your Aunt Ruth for a while until she's better. I had better stay a couple of days too."

"Is Mamma going to be all right?"

"Yes, but she'll need a minor operation and then some rest. It's hard for her to get it here."

"Can I go too, Papa? You promised that the next time the plane came I could go along. Please, Papa."

"No. Not this time. This is an emergency, and, besides, someone will have to stay here to take care of the dogs. You are man enough to do that. I know you will do a good job."

"But, Papa, you promised."

"I'm sorry, Son—not this time. Now I have to get things ready for the trip. The plane will be here in about an hour." Papa ruffled Peter's black hair and smiled.

"I never get to go anywhere. All I do is gather wood and feed the dogs. I get no time for fun," Peter said as he walked toward the kennels. Then his mood brightened. "I know—while they're gone, I'll take a little ride in the kayak. Papa knows how well I can handle it. He told me so." Peter rushed to the kennels and finished his chores.

Far off over the tundra Peter heard the whir of the airplane. "Papa, the plane is coming!" Peter charged through the back door.

"Thank you, Son. Could you help me carry the things down to the beach?"

"Yes, Papa."

"By the way, Peter, the last time I used the kayak I broke one of the ribs. So you better not take it out until it's fixed. Even though you handle it very well, I think you better not use it until I'm here, just in case you have some trouble."

Peter and his father carried the suitcases down to the plane. Then they helped Mamma aboard.

"Why don't you take a little vacation?" Papa said. "You have been working hard since school has been out. Just feed the dogs. I'll call tomorrow morning about nine, so be there by the shortwave about then. I'll come right back in case there is any trouble. Mrs. Napaaktuk isn't far away if you need any help before then. Now be sure not to take the kayak out. Let's pray before we leave." Papa knelt. "Dear Lord, be with Peter while Mamma and I are away. Be with Mamma, and help her to get better soon. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen."

Peter watched the plane disappear over the barren land. Then he was alone.

"I've got a lot of time before night, what little night there is. It seems the sun barely goes down before it comes up again. I don't think it even gets dark. Oh, well, it's a long time till then. Maybe I can fix the kayak and have a surprise for Papa. It may cheer him up, since he's been so worried about Mamma."

Peter got some walrus-hide thongs, his knife, and a piece of driftwood and made a splint for the broken part.

"There. It's as good as new," Peter whispered to himself, "maybe even stronger than new."

He went over and played with the dogs, but he soon tired of that and wandered back to the kayak. "I wonder if it's strong enough. Maybe I should take it out and make sure. No, Papa said not to. But that was because it was broken. Now it's fixed, I think. I'll try it so that if it isn't quite fixed, I can finish it before Papa comes back."

The water was perfect, with only little ripples along the shore. The kayak skimmed along as smoothly as a seal sliding down an ice floe. "This is great! It's never gone better. Maybe I'll take it over to Seal Island just to make sure. I'll be back in about two hours." Before he knew it, he had reached the island. "I don't see any seals. They must be out fishing or something. I had better get back—the sun is starting to get low." Peter got in the boat and started home. He was about 300 yards from shore when he heard a splash behind him. "What's that?" He looked around. "Oh—some killer whales. I hope they keep on going.

They won't hurt me, but they can be rough."

They didn't leave, but kept playing around the kayak—almost upsetting it several times.

"Go away." Peter hit the water with his paddle, but the whales came in closer. Peter paddled back toward the island as fast as he could. He was almost there when one of the whales came up under his boat, lifted it out of the water, then tossed it. It went c-r-a-c-k as it hit the water. Peter paddled the few feet to the island, jumped out, and pulled the kayak up to the shore. Then he looked things over. "That rib is broken again and one or two more also. Now what? I wish Papa were here. He would know what to do." Peter bowed his head and prayed, "Dear Jesus, forgive me for disobeying Papa. Help me to get back safely."

He looked around for some driftwood and after a while found some. "It's a good thing I brought my knife and some thongs with me. It's getting dark; maybe I had better rest for a while and fix it after it's light." He curled up beside his kayak and fell asleep.

"What time is it?" Peter's eyes popped open. The sun was already high in the sky. "I'll have to hurry, or Papa will call, and I won't be there. It took quite a while to shape and fit the wood splints and bind them into position. Just as Peter was finishing, he heard a whir. "There's the plane, but they can't see me way out here. Papa must have called, and now I'm sure he's worried. Why did I disobey? Maybe they'll fly over and look for me. I had better wait here till I see."

In a few minutes he heard the plane take off and fly back to where it came from. "Now Papa will start looking for me. Unless he comes this way first, he may spend all day." Peter bowed his head. "Dear Jesus, make Papa come this way. I don't want Papa to be worried any more than he is already. Thank You. Amen."

"I'd better get started back." Peter pushed his kayak into the water and started back home. "It doesn't work like it did before. There must be other things wrong. Please, Jesus, make Papa come this way." He paddled for about half an hour. "I hear the boat. Thank You, Jesus, Papa's coming."

Peter waved his paddle in the air and shouted, "I'm here, Papa. I'm here."

Finally the boat pulled up alongside, and Papa helped Peter into his boat.

"Papa, forgive me for disobeying you. I must have worried you. I'm sorry."

"Yes, I was worried when you didn't answer the shortwave radio and when the kayak was gone. I just hoped you were still alive. Let's thank Jesus right now. Thank You, Jesus, for keeping Peter safe. Help him always to be obedient and truthful. Amen."

"Now, Peter, tie your kayak to the boat, and you can tell me all about what happened on the way home."

Poodle pencil holder

You'll have fun making this pencil holder. Besides you'll find out that everybody will smile when they see your poodle.

Important. Read the instructions all the way through before starting to make the poodle.

You will need these supplies:

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 7 styrofoam balls (about 1 1/2 inches in diameter)                             | 1 small black pencil (golf pencil)  |
| 2 wiggle eyes (10 mm. is fine)   | 2 4-inch x 4-inch pieces of cardboard or 1 4-inch x 4-inch piece of board |
| 1 small black pompon (1/2 inch is fine)  | 1 6-inch x 6-inch colored cloth.  |
| 1 pair of ears (cut from a piece of black felt or from any heavy black fabric) | scissors  |
|  | super sticky glue   |

Making the base

1. Glue the two cardboard pieces together.
2. Cover the base with colored cloth and glue it well on the bottom side.

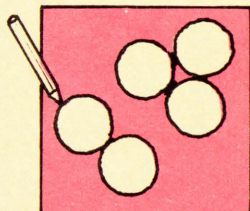

3. Let the glue dry before you go on to the next step.

Making the poodle

1. Glue 2 styrofoam balls together. Gently push them together to

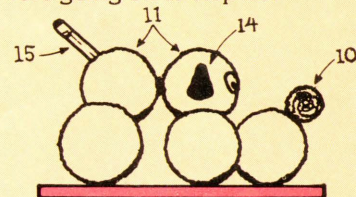

- make the bond a little stronger.
2. Glue 2 more balls together.
3. Glue the other 3 balls together to form a triangle.
4. Make sure you let them dry completely before handling.
5. Cut out the poodle's ears following the pattern.
6. Place the set of 3 styrofoam balls and one set of 2 balls on the base as shown.
7. With a pencil mark the spot where you want the styrofoam

- balls to be glued to the base. Remove the balls.
8. Place a generous dab of glue on each of the marks.

9. Glue these balls on the base.
10. When the balls have dried on the base, glue the black pompon on the ball that is closest to the corner.
11. Glue the last set of 2 balls on top of the others. Place the glue where the balls touch.
12. Let the glue dry well before going on to the next step.
13. Turn the base so the poodle's nose is facing you.
14. Glue the ears onto the head. Again be sure the glue is dry before going on to step 15.

15. Slowly push the pencil tip at the angle shown.

The poodle pencil holder is now completed. Why not show a friend how to make one too.

Pattern for the ears

Cut two pieces of black felt or any heavy black fabric in this shape.

What's the largest fish in the world? Do you know?

Check the answer you think is right.

1. ☐ Whales
2. ☐ Sharks

If you checked sharks, you were right. For the shark is the biggest fish. But if you checked whales you were both right and wrong. How can that be?

You were right because whales are the largest animals in the sea. In fact the blue whale is the largest animal in the world. But you are wrong because whales are not fish. Whales are mammals.

Mammals are warm-blooded animals that have hair or fur. They don't lay eggs—except for the strange animal called the platypus. Baby whales—called calves—like kittens, puppies, and calves, are fed with milk. In fact, Mama Whale squirts her milk into the mouth of her baby. And her milk is so rich that some whale calves gain about 200 pounds a day. Also whales breathe air by means of lungs; if they do not come up to the surface to breathe they will drown.

GENTLE GIANTS

by Howard Larkin

For these reasons whales are classified as mammals and not as fish.

TWO KINDS OF WHALES

There are two kinds of whales—the baleen and the toothed.

Baleen whales are toothless. Instead of teeth, baleen whales have thin plates that hang from their upper jaws. These plates are called baleen and are made of material similar to human fingernails.

The whale swims through the water with its mouth open and scoops up small fish, shrimp, and plankton. Next he closes his mouth and uses his tongue (it may weigh 1½ to 2 tons) to push the water out across the baleen plates. Then he swallows the food caught in the baleen plates.

The toothed whales use their teeth to catch and hold their food. They don't use their teeth for chewing.

Dolphins and porpoises are part of the toothed group.

BALEEN WHALES

Fin Whale

The fin whale is the second-largest whale. It can be as long as 88 feet and can weigh up to 76 tons. The larger blue whale can be 110 feet long and weigh 196 tons. The fin and blue look alike except for size. The right side of the whale's head is a lighter color. It uses this lighter color to frighten the small fish away from it into a smaller area by swimming around them in a big circle. When the fish are all together the whale swims through the mass of fish with its mouth open and scoops them up. If not harpooned it lives about 100 years.

Right Whale

The right whale got its name because it was the right whale to harpoon. Why? It stayed afloat after being killed; most other whales sink. They are slow swimmers, averaging about 5 miles per hour. These whales have very long baleen plates of up to 15 feet. During your great-grandmother's day these plates were used to make the stays for hoop skirts.

Humpback Whale

Humpbacks are named from the way they hump their backs out of the water when they start to dive (called sounding). They are best known for their calls or songs. You can buy recordings of their "songs." Many of the humpbacks live in the Alaskan waters during the summer and swim to the Hawaiian Islands during the winter to have their calves.

Gray Whale

The gray whale lives in the ocean around Alaska during the summer because there is more plankton and shrimp in the cold water. Then during the winter it travels 13,000 miles to the Baja Peninsula, where the calves are born. After a few weeks it starts back to Alaska again. The trip takes about six months.

TOOTHED WHALES

Killer Whales

Killer whales often go in groups (called pods) of 5 to 20 and attack almost anything, including walrus and large whales. In captivity killer whales are easy to train and are quite gentle. You may have seen someone ride on a killer whale's back or put his head in its mouth.

Sperm Whale

This whale is the largest in the toothed group. It can reach 60 feet long and can weigh up to 42 tons. It has teeth only in its lower jaw. The teeth fit into sockets or holes in the upper jaw. Sperm whales can dive up to 7,400 feet (about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  miles) and can stay down over 45 minutes to catch the giant squid they eat. This is the only whale alive today that could have swallowed Jonah.

The blue whale is the largest animal in the world.
It is even several times larger than the elephant.

SWALLOWED BY A WHALE

James Bartley, in 1891, was a crewman on the whaling ship Star of the East. They were hunting sperm whales off the Falkland Islands when the spout of an eighty-foot sperm whale was spotted.

Two whale boats set out to harpoon the whale. When the harpoon entered the whale's side, the frantic whale curved over to sound, its twelve-foot-wide fluke (tail) hitting and capsizing the second boat.

One crewman drowned and James Bartley could not be found.

A few hours later the dead whale was brought alongside the Star of the East, and the crew began to cut it apart to get the blubber. Finally it got so dark that the crew had to quit work for the night.

The next morning when the crew cut off enough of the meat to see the stomach, they were startled by a movement. Quickly cutting it open they found James Bartley. He was unconscious, but alive.

About three weeks later Bartley had recovered enough to talk about the darkness, the heat, and the difficulty he had breathing during the time he was in the stomach of the whale.

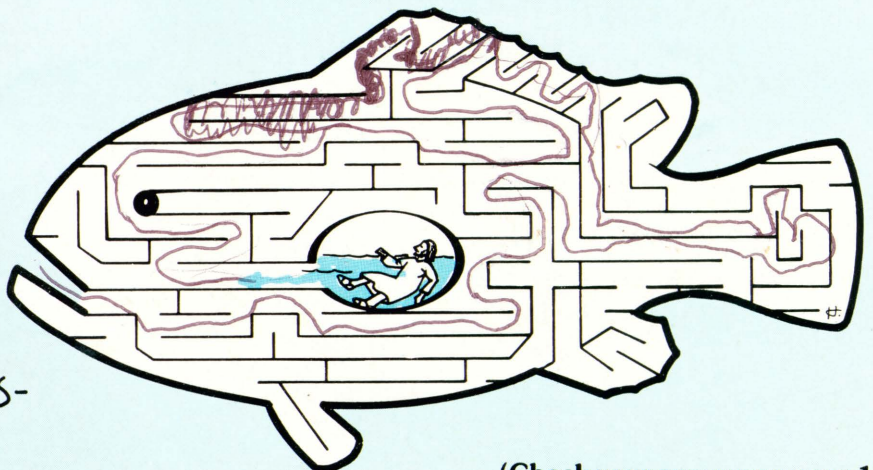

A very long time ago, another man called Jonah tried to run away from God. He boarded a ship sailing the opposite direction from Nineveh although God had told Jonah to go to Nineveh to preach.

When a storm came up the people on the ship were afraid it was going to sink, so they threw Jonah overboard. After he was swallowed by a fish, Jonah prayed to God and promised to obey. The Lord heard his prayer. Three days later the fish opened his mouth and left Jonah on the shore.

You can read more about Jonah in the book of the Bible called Jonah. It is also told in the illustrated Bible story in Rainbow Friends, number 5, 1983.

The Rainbow Health Game

Concept: Jo Mae Robinson

Design: Heber Pintos

Would you like to learn ten principles that will help you to have a strong body and to be happy—and have fun in the process? If you would, this game is for you and your friends.

To play this game you need:

1. A sheet of paper, a pencil, and a ruler.
2. Two to five players.
3. Two tokens for each player. You can use buttons, beans, or tokens from other games.

What to do:

1. On the sheet of paper, using a ruler, draw as many tracks as you have players, as on page 13.
2. Place this copy of Rainbow Friends open to page 13 on a flat surface—either on a table or on the floor—so that the “sunshine” symbols are clearly visible.
3. Mark a line three feet away, from which players will throw the tokens toward the symbols printed on page 13.

How to play:

1. The players line up according to their ages, from the youngest to the oldest. Each one selects a track in the chart and places one of his tokens on the “Start” line.
2. The youngest player steps behind the “throw line” and throws his other token toward the “sunshine” symbols, aiming at one of them.
3. If his token lands on one of the symbols, he performs the appropriate action and then moves his

- token in the chart one space toward the “End.” See list of actions below. If his token does not land on any symbol, or if he fails to perform the required action, he cannot advance his token on the chart until his next turn.
4. A player whose token lands on the symbol marked “Love and trust God” may advance two spaces in the chart after performing the required action.

5. The second player repeats the process, and so on.
6. The player whose token reaches the “End” first wins the game.

Actions

Breathe fresh air, get sunshine .....	Breathe deeply.
Exercise regularly .....	Run in place.
Drink pure water—Bathe regularly .....	Pretend you are drinking water and taking a shower.
Get enough rest and sleep .....	Pretend you are sleeping.
Think good thoughts .....	Tap your head.
Eat good food .....	Pretend you are chewing.
Avoid junk food and snacks .....	Frown, pretend you are pushing something away.
Avoid harmful substances .....	Pretend you are frightened and are pushing something away.
Care for your teeth .....	Pretend you are brushing your teeth.
Love and trust God .....	Assume a position of prayer.

VARIATION

You can play the health game in another interesting way, perhaps as part of summer camp or Vacation Bible School activities.

You will need ten paper plates on which to draw the ten “sunshine” symbols with colored pencils or markers. Write on each the words that go with it, as on page 13.

Then place the “sunshine” plates on the floor in three rows. Mark a line three feet away from which the players will throw the tokens toward the plates. Place the plate marked “Love and trust God” farthest from the “throw line.”

Now you are ready to play, following the same instructions. Have fun!
